SHOOT SAFE BUDDY!

BOYS! SHOW THIS MESSAGE TO YOUR PARENTS!

You'll never see a real outdoorsman aim or shoot his rifle at anything but a safe, proper target. He handles his firearms with care and respect. Your Daisy is made for fun shooting. It is not a lethal weapon but.. like a knife, or auto it may cause damage if handled carelessly. So do not aim or shoot at windows, street lights, song birds, pets, property or any other person ever! Remember, carelessness causes accidents to millions of Americans every year in cars, homes, factories. So . if you are careless with your Daisy or abuse the privilege of owning one . your parents, guardian or police have the right to take it from you and should! Don't let this happen. Be careful. Aim and shoot safe, Buddy!

MEMORIZE THE SHOOTER'S SAFETY PLEDGE!

I pledge myself to PROTECT animals, property and people in my community by always aiming and shooting my Daisy safely!

A Penny Graves Story

BY RICHARD KRAUS

Penny Graves went out in search of a record album as a birthday gift for Chief Marshall . . . but her present turned out to be a host of senseless international spies. . .

"CHIEF IT'S your birthday t—m—" Pretty Penny Graves, ace anti-spy operative looked over at her boss Craig Marshall. "Whatever in the world am I going to get you for a present? Scarf? Pipe? Gloves?"

Craig Marshall frowned gravely "Penny the best present you could give me right now would be the secret of how this country's most important scientific secrets are being stolen, probably at this very moment!"

"Gosh, I'll bet you mean that new committee of scientists meeting in the Pentagon Building," exclaimed Penny instantly serious. "What's been happening?"

Marshall ran a big hand through his iron gray hair.

"You might as well know, Penny, because you'll be working on the case anyway. The scientists in the Pentagon have been working on the latest types of explosives, under the strictest guard. They've been allowed to communicate with no one.

"But just last night a Coast Guard patrol caught a known spy, who was trying to leave the country on a fishing vessel. And [illegible] a complete written transcript of what had been said at the last meeting of the scientists!"

"That's awful, chief. Where was the leak?"

"If I knew Craig Marshall forced a smile. "There I'd settle for a two-bit necktie for my birthday. As it is, nothing short of the Hope Diamond would cheer me up."

Penny mused over the problem as she snatched a quick lunch in the building cafeteria. In spite of what Marshall had said, the auburn haired ex-WAC Lieutenant had an idea that he'd welcome a cheery birthday present from her. It might take his mind off his troubles, if only for a moment.

So it was that after eating, she hurried out to the garage where she parked her little coupe and drove down through the park to Washington's shopping district. She drove slowly, until she passed the window of a record shop.

"Perfect!" Penny snapped her fingers. "I know Craig is a record collector. And he mentioned not being able to get a recent Gershwin album. . . Maybe they've got it."

Penny parked her car and entered the little shop. Behind the counter a slender pale man with thick rimmed glasses looked up sourly.

"Do you have the latest album of George Gershwin's works?" she asked. Her eyes roved the store, suddenly stopped at a bright album which rested on the counter by the cash register.

"Oh there's [illegible] She reached out eagerly for the album. "How much is it?"

The proprietor was out from behind the counter and at her side in two swift cat like steps. "I'm sorry," he said, "but that album is not for sale."

"Why not?" asked Penny reasonably.

"Because it's—it's reserved! I was just going to wrap it up, as you see."

Penny pointed at the shelves over the man's head. "But you've got several more of the same album up there."

She smiled brightly "Let me take that one will you please? I'm in a hurry."

The slender man seemed to waver, his glasses clouding with perspiration. "Well, all right. Here, let me check the records and wrap them. It'll just be a moment."

"That won't be necessary." Penny beamed again. "I can see the album is brand new. How much do I owe you?"

SHE PAID the man and hurried out, cross-crossing through the traffic toward her car, album under her arm. This was a present Marshall would appreciate!

Ten minutes later as she drove into the park, Penny noticed a big black touring car that had been behind her at two stop lights. It detached itself from the stream of traffic and came after her into the park. Idly, she noticed that the long car seemed to be inching close to her tail light.

Her brow crinkling, Penny pressed her foot down on the accelerator. The car behind increased its pace to keep up. She braked the coupe to a slow crawl and immediately the other car slowed up too. It was definitely following her.

Now a-r-r-r-r-ly Penny whipped her car to the right, onto a winding, narrow side road.

INSTANTLY she saw that was a mistake for there were no other cars ahead, and no pedestrians around. There was a throttled roar behind her and the long car began to crawl up next to her. Penny bit her lip and slowed the coupe momentarily.

Then as the touring car was about to pull in to cut her off she gave her car everything it had. It shot ahead, and the big limousine skidding, went off the road. Penny clutched her wheel and rammed her heel on the gas. Stealing a look in her back view mirror she saw two angry faces in the front seat of the big car before a curve in the road hid it entirely.

"BUT CHIEF," she said to Craig Marshall, "I'm certain they were taking me. They tried to cut me off as soon as they had me alone."

"Now Penny," puzzled her boss, "why do you think they'd do that? What possible reason—"

"I've got a hunch," she replied slowly, "that it had something to do with that record album I got for your birthday. The man in the store was certainly reluctant to sell it to me."

Craig opened the album, looked in it. "Looks okay to me." Then he set his jaw grimly. "But let's make sure. There's a record player in the employee's lounge. Let's get down there and try it out."

The ace-spy chief and his assistant held their breaths as the needle made a first faint scratching on the record. Then they breathed out audibly, as they heard the beginning notes of Gershwin's "American in Paris."

"Well, I guess it was a false lead. You probably weren't being followed at all, Penny."

"Wait!" cried the girl, clutching his arm. "Listen!"

The music had halted abruptly and in its place was a slow cultured voice.

"Now Doctor Radcliffe will speak to us on the work he and his staff have been undertaking on Explosive Y-2—"

Marshall quickly snapped off the record player.

"Penny Graves, you've hit something. Where was this shop?"

"Down in the shopping district. But what does it mean?"

"No time to talk. C'mon, we'll round up some men and you drive us down there. This is big!"

As they approached the little record shop, Marshall cautioned his assistant. "Now, Penny, here's what I want you to do. We don't want to alarm anyone in the store, so you go in first, as if you want to exchange the album. Meanwhile the men and I will surround the place. And be careful, kid!"

Penny opened the door to the shop and walked slowly in. From the storeroom in back, she could hear a blustering voice.

"You fool! Idiot! Giving the girl the album! After all the pains we take to get it without being noticed, now we must come here."

Then came a voice Penny recognized as the proprietor's. "But I couldn't help it. She was suspicious! I thought I could sell it to her and then you could get it back without trouble—"

Penny rang the bell on the counter. Instantly the slender, spectacled man came out. "You!" he gasped. "What are you—"

"The album," said Penny smoothly. "I'd like to exchange it. It isn't what I want." She put it on the counter.

"Carl! Anton, come here!" he gasped. Two black-suited men darted out from the back room. They were the same men she had recognized in the rear-view mirror. "Now," he went on, "I'll just take a look at this album."

"Oh, so you do!" boomed a deep voice from the back of the store. Craig Marshall bulked big in the doorway with three FBI men behind him. "Put 'em up. Penny, take their guns. They're a bad lot!"

The proprietor snarled and clutched at his breast pocket. Penny grabbed the album, raised it high and brought it down with a thud on his head. With a muffled groan he collapsed.

The other two raised hands, their faces expressionless as the FBI men disarmed them and handcuffed them together.

"Next stop, Department of Justice," beamed Craig Marshall.

"MAYBE I'M DUMB, boss," said Penny Graves, as she drove back through the park with Marshall at her side. "But what's it all about? Was that album really a transcript of the Pentagon scientists' meeting?"

"Exactly," nodded Marshall. "The spies had a dictaphone rigged up in the meeting room, and they somehow smuggled out records from that. And then the music store man transcribed those records to fit a regular album, to send to one of the spies. It was a clever plan to avoid detection—and it would have—if you hadn't come in at the wrong time!"

"Gosh, that's wonderful, chief!" Suddenly a frown crossed Penny's face. "But, Gee, I'm still on a spot."

"How come, Penny?"

"I still don't have a birthday present for you. I broke the doggone album over that spy's head!"
